

Sizing Guide

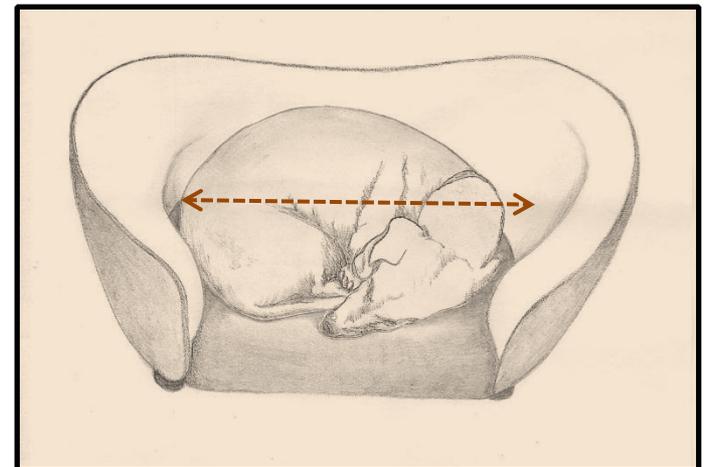

Choosing the right size bed for your dog

The most important factor in choosing the right size bed is in knowing how your dog likes to sleep. Gauging the fit based only on your dog's weight may not ensure that they will be as comfortable as they should be.

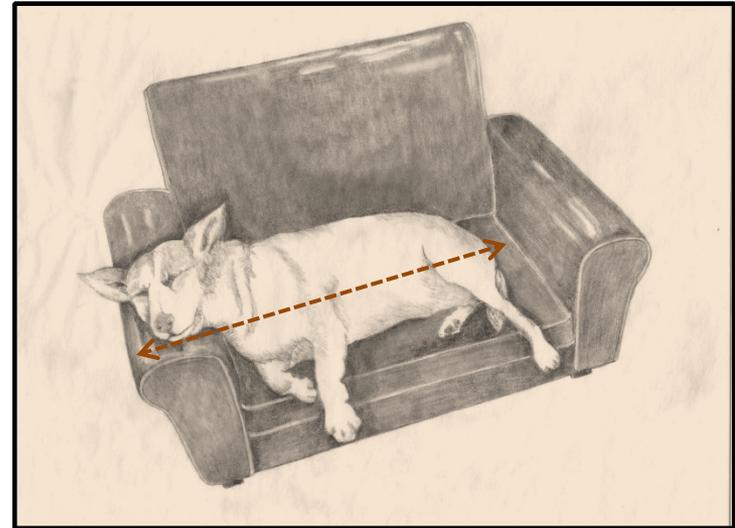

By determining the type of sleeper they are and measuring them in their sleeping position, you can choose a bed from the category that suits them for size and comfort. So, notice your dog when they are in their favorite and most relaxed position and see which of the following categories best defines them. Then take a quick measurement as suggested for each category below.

Snuggler ~ If your dog likes to curl up in a ball, then you have a “Snuggler”. Your dog will prefer a bed that supports them all around; keeping them feeling safe and secure.

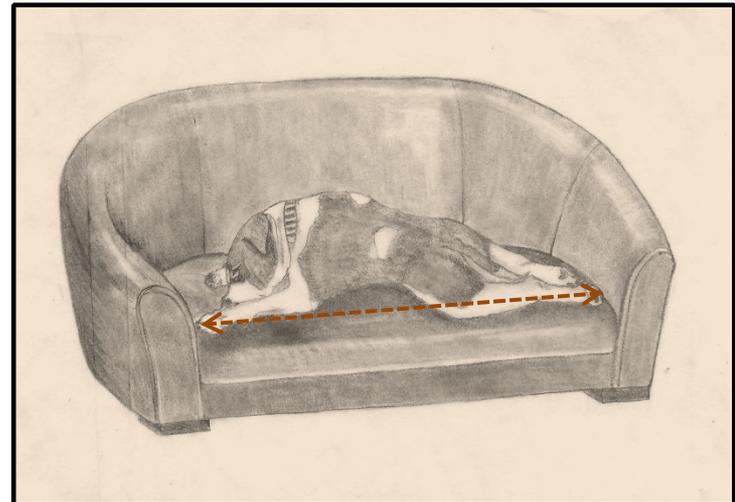

~To choose the right size bed for a “Snuggler”, measure your dog while they are curled, from end to end.

Leaner ~ Is your dog always looking for something to rest their head on? Then they are probably a “Leaner” and most likely would prefer a bed with a slightly raised arm for them to rest their head on.
~To choose the right size bed for a “Leaner”, measure your dog while they are lying down from nose to tail.

Stretcher ~ Perhaps your dog prefers to sleep sprawled out, taking up as much room as possible. Then you have a “Stretcher” and you will want to select a bed that is a bit larger than they measure to give them the extra room that they need for a comfortable stretch.
~To choose the right size bed for a “Stretcher”, measure your dog while they are lying in their most sprawled out position from front paw to the furthest point they extend to in the back.
